

Please read “as is,” with humor ☺ and don’t wing it.
Proper pronunciations of key words are in yellow.
It helps to read it through at least 3x before the “real deal.”
Thanks!

Kurt Greene started demonstrating his servant-leadership style without even knowing that was “a thing” when he was a plebe at West Point. Today he’s a Professional EOS Implementer®, helping entrepreneurs and leadership teams get what they want from their businesses.

Some quick highlights of Kurt’s background:

- 35 years of experience in operations and HR leadership roles
- At blue-chip companies like Pfizer, Procter & Gamble, and GE
- MBA in human resources and organization management from Vanderbilt University
- Graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point where he earned a Bachelor’s degree in mechanical engineering
- Served our country as an officer in the U.S. Army Corps [kohr] of Engineers.

Kurt is also a Master Chair for Vistage [VIST'-ij] Worldwide, serving as coach, mentor, and confidant [KON'-fi-dahnt] to more than 80 CEOs, business owners, key executives, and managers who were carefully selected to be in one of his four private peers groups in Knoxville. Kurt received the Vistage Chair Excellence Award for the last three years.

Kurt also has earned various certifications which are really just fancy-sounding gibberish behind his name that he knows you don’t really care about.

More interesting is that he taught himself to play guitar in high school, and led a rock band for a few years while he was a cadet at West Point. Although the band was never signed to a major music label, Kurt was standing next to a buddy who was kissed by the drummer of The Go-Go’s.

We asked Kurt to speak with us today because...

[briefly describe in your own words “Why Kurt and why now?”]

Please join me in welcoming Kurt Greene!
