8	Yes, you could create a govt rate for architects who will never touch a contract, who live too far from events, who don't go to conferences because everything is self-pay. I'm paying $900 for some letters after my name, and the value is pretty much nil. I feel stupid for paying that much. For nothing, Either the AIA admits it is 100% for firms, or recognizes that plenty of architects do NOT work in that setting. To my point - there was a call for inspirational messages for students (I think they were graduating) and I wrote one and then saw it was to be submitted on "your firm's letterhead." I don't have a firm or a letterhead. Your bias is something that cannot be overcome unless you change dramatically. Which you won't because, despite earning medals from NASA, (a pretty big deal) you don't consider me a "real" architect.	5/12/2025 9:56 AM

6	Would you be interested in a government rate that recognizes you don't use AIA contracts, do not use masterspec, do not attend conferences, etc? Yes. Should there be a reduced rate if you live two hours from your chapter and can't attend a single event? Yes. You don't even know how many architects work for the government, do you? Actual licensed architects work in the public sector. Either the AIA recognizes that or quits pretending it is for architects because it is not. The AIA exists for firms, not architects.	5/12/2025 9:56 AM
