4	Yes, I would like to see the AIA at the local, state and national level take a stronger stance on the use of the title Architect by unrelated professions. Specifically the IT/computer profession. Why is it that a new graduate, with a first professional degree is not allowed to call themselves an Architect, yet, anyone in the computer/tech/IT industry is allowed to call themselves an Architect. Why is that? The AIA's complete and total lack of action on this front just further diminishes our profession.	5/28/2025 2:01 PM

6	When I first joined the AIA over 20 years ago, there was much debate about the substantial increase in membership costs. The justification for the increase was that the AIA would be implementing a national public awareness campaign that included radio and television advertisements which seemed to be very effective about educating the public about our profession and the benefits of hiring an AIA architect. That awareness campaign seems to have disappeared in the past 10+ years but should be brought back.	5/28/2025 10:10 AM

24	My answers may be a bit skewed for this survey. But I live in area not easily served by a local chapter. My firm is in another component's jurisdiction and due to travel, it's not feasible to participate in that component either. So, it really is difficult for me to participate or keep up with AIA initiatives as a whole as AIA has increasingly become less involved in my professional life. I mainly pay my dues out of loyalty and a general positive belief in the organization. I may be in the minority for this type of situation but thought I should mention it.	4/30/2025 11:00 AM
25	I think the AIA, and not only the organization, but all architects needs to market what we do and what advantages we have to the general public.	4/30/2025 10:46 AM
