Association of Specialty Cut Flower Growers

The Association of Specialty Cut Flower Growers (ASCFG) was formed in 1988 on a simple belief: growers who learn together, grow together. Today the ASCFG connects nearly 2,500 commercial cut flower growers across North America, and around the World, providing the production knowledge, peer community, and business resources growers need to build sustainable, successful operations – while advancing the specialty cut flower industry for the growers who come after them.

As a 501(c)(6) non-profit, the ASCFG invests in academic and on-farm research through annual grants, offers a scholarship program for students pursuing careers in cut flowers, and produces the North American Cut Flower Trial Program. Members are served by The Cut Flower Quarterly – the only U.S. periodical dedicated to cut flower production – along with year-round access to conference and webinar recordings, regional farm tours, and a Biennial North American conference and trade show . Through LocalFlowers.org, a searchable member database, the ASCFG also helps connect the public directly with local cut flower farmers.
