Your inside look at Election Day

Election Day is coming, and its results could bring lasting effects on transportation and relevant policies. With implications such as these, it's important to be prepared and informed. Check out these outlooks for the Presidential, Senate, and House races to ensure you're in the know.

Presidential Election

With less than a month until Election Day, the race for the White House and control of Congress remains tight. Prior to President Biden's decision to withdraw from the race, former President Trump had a lead in most national and swing state polls. With her entry into the race, Vice President Harris narrowed President Trump's lead and even made more states, like Georgia and North Carolina, competitive. Most prognosticators rate only seven states (in yellow below) as true toss-ups. These seven states account for 93 electoral votes.

According to most polls, Democrats can rely on 226 electoral votes while Republicans have 219. This means Vice President Harris needs 44 electoral votes to win, while President Trump needs 51. While polls in these swing states show a close race, Vice President Harris maintains leads in Nevada, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Factor in virtual dead heats in Arizona, Georgia, and North Carolina, Vice President Harris looks to have the most avenues to 270 electoral votes. However, with poll after poll showing a tight race, the outcome is far from set.

*Two states, Maine and Nebraska, award electoral votes by congressional districts (all others are awarded winner-take-all statewide). Nebraska's two statewide electoral votes, and two of its three districts, are rated Safe Republican. Maine's statewide votes are rated Likely Democratic. The ratings for Maine's two districts, and Nebraska's one competitive district, are listed separately.

Taking action toward increased safety on roadways

In an effort to eliminate deaths on roadways, USDOT recently opened a call for organizations to take action this year. ACT has joined this campaign, titled Allies in Action, as part of our commitment to safety in transportation.

By prioritizing safety-focused learning in our programming, we can advance Complete Streets and Vision Zero goals. ACT is proud to join the slate of organizations coming together to reduce roadway fatalities. Through the deployment of TDM strategies, we can create a range of real transportation options that lead to safer and healthier communities for all.

If your organization is interested in joining the movement, visit the link below to learn more and get involved.
