RESEARCH

University of New England College of Osteopathic Medicine

Biddeford, ME

Research Title: Beyond Lectures and Labs: Evaluating the Effectiveness of Hands-on Mass Casualty Incident Training in Medical Education

8/2024 – Present

*Principal Investigator: Erb, J.

Project Team: Alward, B., Gardner, S., Sobolewski, K., and Rowell, N.

Research Mentor: Kyle Scully Ph.D. FF/EMT, Department of Biomedical Science

- Assess the effectiveness of Mock MCI training in building confidence among healthcare students in triage and decision-making for Mass Casualty Incidents.
- Conduct pre-, post-, and 3-month follow-up surveys on healthcare students' confidence in MCI-related skills, with a cohort analysis based on presence of prior pre-hospital emergency medicine experience.
- Evaluate the long-term retention of MCI-related skills, using longitudinal data, to measure sustained confidence and knowledge.
- Evaluate the importance of MCI training in medical education and provide recommendations for integrating MCI preparedness into curricula.

Worcester Polytechnic Institute

Worcester, MA

Research Title: DNA Sequence Analyses and Error Correction

7/2013 – 4/2014

Major Qualifying Project Member, Erb, J., w/ Rebh, A., Pepo, M., Maung, W.

Principal Investigator: Patrick Flaherty, Ph. D., Department of Biomedical Engineering

- Designed and implemented a novel image-processing pipeline to reduce errors in next-generation DNA sequencing, improving accuracy by identifying and correcting phasing and pre-phasing issues.
- Conducted extensive simulation studies using Python and MATLAB to validate pipeline performance, achieving a targeted 10x reduction in sequencing error rates.
- Compared performance of multiple error-correction algorithms, demonstrating enhanced efficiency and robustness over industry-standard methods.

- Collaborated with a multidisciplinary team of peers and an advisor to integrate statistical models and cutting-edge software engineering practices into pipeline design.

National Museum of Science and Industry
