

MEET AARON COX

Aaron Cox is the founder of the Law Offices of Aaron D. Cox, PLLC, where he has practiced exclusively for 19 years representing the interests of property owners, management companies, landlords, and creditors across Michigan. In addition to his legal practice, Aaron is also a real estate investor, giving him a dual perspective as both counsel and owner. He has managed his own firm of 25 employees for nearly two decades, drawing on his background in sports and leadership to build a collaborative and effective team.

Beyond his professional work, Aaron has been deeply involved in service and leadership. He is the past president of both the Downriver Bar Association and the Taylor Rotary, serves as volunteer counsel for three nonprofit organizations, and sits on the Detroit Apartment Association's legislative committee. He has also participated in legislative work with the Michigan Creditor's Bar Association, helping to shape policy discussions that affect property owners and landlords.

Aaron believes the challenges facing property owners today are significant and require strong, informed voices at both the local and state level. Since the pandemic, he has seen increasing threats to property rights and a troubling trend of municipalities balancing budgets through aggressive ordinance enforcement against landlords. He is committed to ensuring that property owners and managers work more collaboratively to address these challenges and to safeguard their rights and investments. His extensive legal expertise, coupled with his experience as a business owner and investor, uniquely position him to contribute meaningful insight and advocacy on the PMAM Board of Directors.
